

Application for the Classical Association of New England's The Thomas and Eleanor Means Fund

The Thomas and Eleanor Means Fund awards up to $300 annually for educational travel to classical sites to a middle or secondary school student who shows particular interest in the classics. Such travel must be of an educational, rather than a personal or familial, nature; must have as its destination sites that bear substantial physical evidence of the presence of the ancient Greeks and/or Romans; and must be organized by a classics teacher or be a recognized and established institutional program of study for classical studies (e.g. School Year Abroad or the University of Dallas' Summer Latin in Rome). Travel must be completed by the first 15th of September that follows the reception of the award.
